

Novavax Recognized by Washington Post as Top Workplace

June 17, 2016

(GLOBE NEWSWIRE via COMTEX) --GAITHERSBURG, Md., June 17, 2016 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Novavax, Inc. (Nasdaq:NVAX), today announced that, for the third consecutive year, it has been recognized as a Top Workplace for 2016.

"At Novavax, we strive to create an environment where teamwork and collaboration thrive based on a culture that values and appreciates its employees," said Stanley C. Erck, President and CEO. "We have an incredibly motivated team that is driven to improve global health through the development of safe and effective vaccines. We are committed to making Novavax one of the Top Workplaces for years to come."

The Washington Post Top Workplaces are determined solely on employee feedback via an employee survey conducted by WorkplaceDynamics, LLP, a leading research firm on organizational health and employee engagement.

Jill Hoyt, Vice President, Human Resources, said, "We are especially proud to be recognized because our talented and engaged workforce is our most important asset. We believe that all good outcomes begin with happy employees and we are honored to receive this recognition from the Washington Post for the third consecutive year."

The Washington Post publishes the complete list of Top Workplaces on June 16, 2016. For more information about the Top Workplaces lists, please visit www.topworkplaces.com.
